Supplemental Box
(To be used when the space in any of the preceding boxes is not sufficient)

Continuation of: III.1

The characterising portion of independent claim 1 indicates that the inside surface of the first tubular body comprises helical races for guiding the balls.

This feature clearly refers to the subject matter of the second group of inventions mentioned in the international search report. Indeed, this second group of inventions provides for the production of races (as one of a plurality of alternative embodiments that can be envisaged) on the inside surface of the first tubular body of the linear actuator (see claims 15-18 of the original version of the present application).

Since no international search report has been established with respect to this second group of inventions, it is not possible to examine independent claim 1. As a result, no opinion can be established with regard to the novelty, inventive step and industrial applicability (PCT Article 33) of the set of claims of the present international application.
